The only time I'm ever in a legit cab (in San Diego) it's because I have an umbrella policy. I don't want to have to spend a few thousand a month in the hospital or on doctor visits if I'm hit by a cab. (I've been hit before, and I've tried to board those cabs.) The insurance pays the bill. Legit taxis are usually about $5.40, not $12 or $14. Taxi's are usually prebooked or when you call them. They do not pick up at random. I've been told that there are dirty taxis and clean taxis. I know some very good cab drivers who are very good at their job and are not afraid to pull over to pick me up. I've also been pulled over by police, for whatever reason, and I'm not the only one. No, it's not your run of the mill hit and run with a couple of scratches and you'll be okay...it's the people who are out to get you, maim you, and kill you for your cash. Those are the taxis you need to watch for. There are legit taxis out there. If you get to the airport with a group of friends, especially if you have tickets, you'll get a ride with a taxi and will not need to call and book one. The hotel call the cab companies for you. I've done that many times. There are others who wait until it is convenient for them to hit someone (usually someone they don't like, or didn't like them). They want to see what they did to you, what kind of car you're in, how much it costs, and how much the insurance will be. They may want a second hit to make sure you are really not going to be a problem. That's how some people in the world work...if they didn't get what they wanted the first time they may try again. People will call you and say they need you to pick them up and tell you what they want to do to you. They also tell you how much it is going to cost to get them out of trouble and give you a phone number to call. That's how people get their hit and run reputation. I'm not saying that there are not legit cabs out there. I'm saying that it is hard to tell who they are from who is not a legit cab. Yes, they have to have 82157476af
